For our inaugural NADA New York presentation, ABRI MARS is pleased to present Liminal Space, featuring works by Marija Olšauskaitė and Eric Wolf.

The duo presentation explores the intersection of natural observation, domestic intimacy, and the fluid boundaries of materiality. Though working across disparate media and geographies, both artists are united by a practice of sustained observation and an interest in the polymorphic qualities of their mediums. Together, Wolf's rhythmic, graphic landscapes and Olšauskaitė's vivid glass sculptures offer a choreographed experience probing the threshold between the "solid" natural world and the "liquid" realm of human intimacy.

ERIC WOLF (b 1960 Hackensack, New Jersey, lives and works between Chatham, New York, and Rangeley, Maine) maintains a practice devoted to the rigorous constraints and expressive possibilities of a monochromatic ink palette. In a career spanning over three decades, Wolf has interrogated the lineage of landscape tradition, bridging ancient Literati painting and the formalist reductions of Modernism. Working exclusively en plein air in singular, remote locations, his unmediated engagement with the environment and tension between observation and abstraction have earned him reviews in Art in America, Artforum, and The New York Times. Selected exhibitions include ABRI MARS, New York; Fredericks & Freiser, New York; Jeff Bailey Gallery, New York; Pamela Salisbury Gallery, Hudson, New York; Daniel Weinberg Gallery, Los Angeles, California; Miles McEnery Gallery, New York; Gladstone Gallery, New York; Salon 94, New York; Kai Matsumiya, New York; Bill Arning Exhibitions, Kinderhook, New York; Spazio 22, Milan, Italy; Columbus Museum of Art, Columbus, Ohio; The Drawing Center, New York; The Grolier Club, New York; Musée Marmottan Monet, Paris, France; Weatherspoon Art Museum, Greensboro, North Carolina.
